Be Aware of the Colours

What colour are you using when communicating? The first step towards being a conscious communicator is to be aware of which colour you are using. Like in a dance where each colour is a different position, this can then help you choose the colour which keeps the communication flowing and respectful.

ME VS OTHER

Blue

Blue is about ME and what belongs only to me.

Red

Red is about COMMON ACTION which belongs to both me and others.

Green

Green is about OTHERS and what belongs to them.

Order of Colours

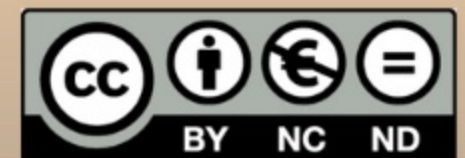

Humans across all divides of culture, age, gender and styles of communication are generally more open and trusting towards a person who starts by focusing on the other, to then inform of overlapping topics which naturally lead to shared action emerging from the conversation.

5%

Proportion of Colours

Most of the focus needs to be on the other person to get a good understanding of what belongs to them. Blue comes when you then expose what belongs to you and eventually if done in a timely way will only require a small percentage of red to open the possibility of shared action.
